

“BRAZILIAN DEMOCRACY FROM DILMA TO TEMER: NAVIGATING THE CRISES”

Brazilian Studies Programme Workshop
3rd February 2017

Biographical Sketches of Speakers

Fernando Bizarro is a doctoral candidate in Government at Harvard University. He holds a MA degrees in political science from the University of Notre Dame and from the University of Campinas, and has been a research assistant for the Varieties of Democracy (V-DEM) project since 2014. His research focuses on the nature, causes, and consequences of political regimes and political parties, globally and in Brazil. His work has been published in academic journals and book chapters in Brazil and in the United States. He is co-author with Scott Mainwaring and Timothy Power of “The Uneven Institutionalization of a Party System: Brazil,” in Scott Mainwaring, ed., Party Systems in Latin America: Institutionalization, Erosion, and Collapse (Cambridge University Press, forthcoming 2017).

Barbara Fritz is director of the Institute for Latin American Studies and professor of economics at the School of Business & Economics at the Freie Universität Berlin. Her fields of expertise are development economics and international macroeconomics, money and finance, with a special focus on Latin America, especially Brazil. She has published widely on economic development strategies, regional monetary cooperation, and on the interdependence between macroeconomic and social policies. With Lena Lavinas, she recently co-edited a volume on A Moment of Equality for Latin America? Challenges and Limits for Redistributive Policies.

Kathryn Hochstetler is Professor of International Development at the London School of Economics and Political Science. She is the author of “Rethinking Presidentialism: Challenges and Presidential Falls in South America,” Comparative Politics 38, no. 4 (2006). She has published widely on environmental politics in Brazil, including the prize-winning Greening Brazil: Environmental Activism in State and Society (Duke University Press, with Margaret Keck). Her current projects include a book on the adoption of wind and solar power in Brazil and South Africa and research on the environmental and developmental impacts of BNDES’ support for infrastructure projects in Brazil and worldwide.

Magna Inácio is associate professor of Political Science and former director of its Centre for Legislative Studies (CEL-DCP) at the Universidade Federal de Minas Gerais (UFMG). A former postdoctoral fellow at University of Oxford (2012), she holds a PhD in Political Science from UFMG (2006), and has conducted extensive comparative research on political institutions, coalition politics, and executive-legislative relations. She co-edited (with Lucio Rennó) Legislativo Brasileiro em Perspectiva Comparada and (with Fátima Anastasia et al.), Elites Parlamentares na América Latina. She has published in journals such as Presidential Studies Quarterly, América Latina Hoy, Journal of Politics in Latin America and Brazilian Political Science Review.

Peter Kingstone is Professor and Co-Director of the International Development Institute at King's College London. He is author of several books on Latin America, including Crafting Coalitions for Reform: Business Preferences, Political Institutions and Neoliberal Reform in Brazil, The Political Economy of Latin America: Reflections on Neoliberalism and Development, as well as co-editor of Democratic Brazil: Actors, Institutions and Processes, Democratic Brazil Revisited and the Handbook of Latin American Politics. He has published various articles and book chapters on the subject of democratisation and the politics of neoliberal economic reforms. His newest co-edited volume with Timothy Power, Democratic Brazil Divided, will be published by the University of Pittsburgh Press in April 2017.

Lucas M. Novaes is a research fellow at the Institute for Advanced Study in Toulouse, and studies political representation in the developing world. His most recent project analyzes how makeshift parties outsource voter mobilization to autonomous, non-partisan political brokers in order to win large-scale elections. Other works examine why gender disparities in the political arena persist, and why exogenous economic shocks might affect voter's retrospection. Before moving to France, he received a Ph.D from the University of California, Berkeley.

Nara Pavão is a visiting professor in the Political Science Department at the Federal University of Pernambuco (Recife, Brazil). She received a PhD in Comparative Politics from the University of Notre Dame (2015) and was a postdoctoral researcher at the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions (CSDI) at Vanderbilt University (2015-2016). Her research focuses primarily on the areas of corruption, public opinion, distributive politics, and voting behavior. She is finalizing a book manuscript that explains how accountability for corruption works, offering a novel explanation for why corrupt politicians survive democratic elections. Her primary region of interest is Latin America, with particular emphasis on Brazil.

Anthony W. Pereira is Professor and Director of the Brazil Institute at King's College London. He has a B.A. from Sussex University and an M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard University. He has held positions at the New School, the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tulane University, and the University of East Anglia. His books include Political (In)justice: Authoritarianism and the Rule of Law in Brazil, Chile and Argentina (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2005); and (with Lauro Mattei) The Brazilian Economy Today: Towards a New Socio-Economic Model? (Palgrave Macmillan, 2015). He is currently involved in a research network on Brazilian foreign policy and working on a book on the formation of the Brazilian state.

Carlos Pereira is currently a Visiting Scholar at Hertie School of Governance, Berlin. He is Professor at Getúlio Vargas Foundation (FGV), Rio de Janeiro. He was a Visiting Fellow at Brookings Institution and a Research Fellow at the University of Oxford. His research focuses on the effect of political institutions on public policy outcomes; budgetary policies; theory of regulation and regulatory governance; executive-legislative relationships; coalition management; and legislative organization in comparative perspective, corruption and checks & balance institutions. His recent work includes Brazil in Transition: Beliefs, Leadership, and Institutional Change, with Lee Alston, Marcus Melo and Bernardo Mueller and Making Brazil Work: Checking the President in a Multiparty System with Marcus Melo.

Aníbal Pérez-Liñán is Professor of Political Science and a member of the Center for Latin American Studies at the University of Pittsburgh. He is also editor of the Latin American Research Review. Pérez-Liñán is the author of Presidential Impeachment and the New Political Instability in Latin America (Cambridge, 2007) and of Democracies and Dictatorships in Latin America: Emergence, Survival, and Fall (with Scott Mainwaring, Cambridge, 2013). He is working on a book titled The Political Foundations of the Rule of Law, about judicial instability in Latin America.

Timothy J. Power (workshop convenor) is University Lecturer in Brazilian Studies and a Fellow of St Antony's College at the University of Oxford, where he directs the Brazilian Studies Programme (BSP) within the Latin American Centre. He is currently completing a book with Paul Chaisty and Nic Cheeseman entitled Coalitional Presidentialism in Comparative Perspective:

Minority Executives in Multiparty Systems (Oxford University Press), and his newest co-edited volume with Peter Kingstone, Democratic Brazil Divided, will be published by the University of Pittsburgh Press in April 2017. His most recent article (with Svitlana Chernykh and David Doyle) is "Measuring Legislative Power: An Expert Reweighting of the Fish-Kroenig Parliamentary Powers Index" in Legislative Studies Quarterly.

Rodrigo Rodrigues-Silveira is professor of political science at the University of Salamanca. His research focuses on subnational politics and, more precisely, on the intersection between politics and territory. Among his published works are two monographs "Local Government and the Welfare State" (Gobierno Local y Estado de Bienestar), "Spatial Representation and Maps" (Representación Espacial y Mapas) as well as other peer-reviewed journal articles. He was also awarded five national and international prizes on territorial politics and fiscal policy.

Alfredo Saad-Filho is Professor of Political Economy at SOAS, University of London, and was a senior economic affairs officer at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. He has degrees in Economics from the Universities of Brasília (Brazil) and London (SOAS), and has taught in universities and research institutions in Brazil, Canada, Italy, Japan, Mozambique, Switzerland, and the UK. His research interests include the political economy of development, industrial policy, neoliberalism, democracy, alternative economic policies, Latin American political and economic development, inflation and stabilisation, and the labour theory of value.

Diego Sánchez-Ancochea is Director of the Latin American Centre, Associate Professor in the Political Economy of Latin America at the University of Oxford and Governing Body Fellow of St Antony's College. His research concentrates on income inequality, social policy, structural transformation, and the political economy of development in Latin America. Together with Juliana Martínez Franzoni, he is the author of The Quest for Universal Social Policy in the South. Actors, Ideas and Architectures (CUP, 2016) and Good Jobs and Social Services: How Costa Rica Achieved the Elusive Double Incorporation (Palgrave MacMillan, 2013). He is also the co-editor of the Journal of Latin American Studies.

Natália Guimarães Duarte Sátyro is a teacher and researcher at the Post-Graduate Program of Political Science at the Federal University of Minas Gerais (UFMG), in Belo Horizonte, Brazil. She completed her doctorate in political science at IUPERJ in 2008 and is currently the coordinator of Research Group for Public Policy of ALACIP (Latin American Association of Political Science) and co-convenor of the Research Committee on "Welfare State and Developing Societies" at IPSA. Her main research area is in public policies and welfare state with a special focus on Brazil and Latin American countries.

Luis Schiumerini is a political scientist at the University of Oxford. He is a Postdoctoral Prize Research Fellow at Nuffield College and a Research Affiliate of the Latin American Center at St Antony's College. Luis studies democratic representation and political behavior in Latin America. His research is forthcoming at the Journal of Conflict Resolution and Perspectives on Politics. His book manuscript, "Blessing and Curse: Incumbency and Democracy in South America" investigates why incumbents bear different electoral fortunes in new democracies, building on fieldwork and experimental analysis conducted in Brazil, Argentina and Chile. Luis received his PhD from Yale University in 2015.

Jazmin Sierra is an Associate Member of Nuffield College, University of Oxford. She earned her Ph.D and M.A. in Political Science from Brown University and a B.A. in International Studies from Universidad Torcuato Di Tella. Jazmin studies comparative and international political economy with a regional focus on Latin America. Her research interests include the political economy of global production and innovation, state-business relations, and development finance. Jazmin is currently working on a book manuscript that examines the political economy of state support for domestic multinationals in Brazil. Her research has been funded by the Social Science Research Council (IDRF-SSRC) and the Watson Institute for International Studies, and has appeared in Comparative Political Studies.